"10 Reps in 10 days"

Ascent Employees: Sean Gaydos and Stephen Geyer

First there was Woodstock, and then Band Aid, followed closely by Lollapalooza, but the next incarnation of a traveling road show breaks all previous records. Two men, an RV, and a bunch of lights traveling 4,800 miles in two weeks to see ten agents. A feat like this has never been attempted before, and likely will never be done again. It took stamina, strength, fortitude, and in Stephen's case, ear plugs, to make it through the gauntlet. After 24 gas tank fill ups, a battle with killer fire ants, and way too many choruses on "99 Bottles of Beer on the Wall", we had successfully achieved our goal of meeting all of our new agents, and helping them to understand all that Ascent can offer them. We got to see some old friends, and make a few new ones, and look forward to a great future working together. We would like to thank everyone who we met with for their time and interest, and we can't wait until Repalooza II will be coming soon to a city near you!

A few comments that could be heard over the course of the trip:

That there Clark is an RV. She's a beauty aint she?

Why is it that every KOA is right next to an active train track?

Are there any trees in Kansas?

Why do people in Texas name their vehicles?

Gotta stop for gas, again!

Why is Kansas City in Missouri?

and our personal favorite...

Those aren't pillows!
